

Alex Treadway Bio

Alex Treadway is a British photographer with fifteen years extensive experience in the travel and documentary world.

From 2007-12, Alex lived in Kathmandu during which time he worked for a wide variety of travel magazines, adventure brands and NGO's, documenting stories throughout the entire Himalayan region and Asia.

Notable projects during this time included the entire photography for the book 'Life in the Himalayas', published by ICIMOD for which he travelled to all eight countries in the Himalayas. The images from Afghanistan have been celebrated on platforms such as Maptia and published in multiple magazines. Another challenging assignment took Alex to remote hospitals and health posts throughout Nepal, sometimes walking for days, to produce a series of compelling portraits for a healthcare NGO.

While in Nepal Alex also worked for numerous travel magazines and adventure brands such as The North Face and Red Bull Adventure. On assignment for the acclaimed magazine GEO, Alex spent four weeks at Everest base camp. The images became an 18-page article in GEO Special, and the night time images of Sherpas in the ice fall were published in National Geographic.

More recently Alex has completed the photography for the coffee table book 'Trekking Beyond' which covers forty treks around the world, published in 2018 by Aurum Press.

Although Alex is best known for his work in Asia, he has also worked extensively throughout Africa, Europe and South America. In 2014 one of Alex's images from Colombia was selected for the front cover of National Geographic.

As well as working alone in remote corners of the world, Alex is equally comfortable managing commercial shoots on a large scale, directing models, scouting locations and working with people.

Alex lives with his partner Clare and baby daughter in Stoke Newington, London.

Colombo, Sri Lanka:
A HIDDEN
FOODIE
CAPITAL

Born in Nigeria to Irish parents, Brian Johnston is an expatriate who moved to Sri Lanka in 2006. He's based in Colombo, the UK and China, and runs cafe, Spring House.

Story by BRIAN JOHNSTON
TRAVEL JOURNALIST

COLOMBO

Sri Lanka's capital packs in colonial heritage, waterfront walks, museums and flourishing markets along with the diversity of flavours, fish and curry, but its cuisine will linger most in the mind.

Spices and coconut are dominant flavours in Sri Lankan cooking, which features influences from remnants of trade with India, China and the Middle East, and from its Portuguese, Dutch and British colonisers.

You'll savour a glorious range of often fiery curries, assembled from fish, poultry and carmine-tinted coconut milk. Fish and crab curries and Caravanis curries. Freshly along, Flavour Lovers feast in the southern suburbs here great Sri Lankan seafood.

End the day at seaside promenade Galle Face Green, bustling for sunset strolls, people-watching and street music. Book well-spiced treats such as Pigeon Island, spicy chicken and shrimp fritters. Leave room for Sri Lankan desserts based on coconut, mango, fruit, honey and kaneel, accompanied by a cup of Ceylon tea. ■
